

Washington, PA to Dublin, OH

Today we leave Pennsylvania behind and pass through West Virginia and into Ohio. It is still wet but we have hope for less rain. Jeremy is navigating today for his first time. He knows what we need to stay in the running and assured me that he will “just get'er done.”

I sent the rest of the team to the lunch stop to set up the gate. That left me with the daunting task of laundry. I told the boys I will wash their shirts but there was a limit to what I would do for them. After all, I am not their mother!

In Dublin, we waited for the team to arrive. The Philadelphia team was the first of the X-Cup teams to arrive. It was good to see them make it across the finish line on their own power. They need the moral boost. We were the third team in and we came in with the best score so far. We knew Lawrence KS, was on the trailer with a break down. Ponca City was the only one still out and they were the last car to cross the finish.

News was that they were over heating at the lunch stop. That did not seem to be a factor as they pulled across the finish in Dublin with 44.70 seconds. We held the second position and we are gaining on Charleston over all.

Our score was 1:43:28 for the day with the age factor which was a good day evidenced by the scores of many of the experienced racers. It is a score to beat but nothing to be ashamed of. Besides, tomorrow is another day!

We worked on some electrical problems this evening and we may have to look at the engine when we hit Indianapolis tomorrow evening.
